

The 4 Best Ways to Advertise Your Health and/or Beauty Business

Any professional in the health or beauty business knows that the quality of their work is proven by how the client looks and feels in the end. A top-notch haircut, massage, or teeth cleaning is a reflection of whoever was responsible, and in that way, they're a lot like advertisements.

Your advertisement is also a reflection of your business. You want it to be perceived as offering something valuable and it needs to look visually appealing and professional. With so many advertising tactics, we're focusing on the top 4 that will help promote and grow your health and/or beauty business.

1. Advertise with Coupons

Coupons have a significant influence over the buying decisions of almost every consumer in America. Who wouldn't opt to buy a product or service for less money if they had the option? Your spa, beauty salon, doctor, or dentist office can greatly benefit from offering coupons.

Discounts on popular products or services will prompt locals to visit your business, especially people who might've been putting off teeth-cleaning or a manicure because those services were out of budget. As a matter of fact, customers are likely to spend more on other services after they get the initial discount from a coupon.

Your local community will be more likely to support your health and/or beauty business when you choose to advertise exclusive coupons and deals. And if you need help, a business like [Ad Pages](http://Ad Pages) can help. With their local magazines filled with discounts to popular local establishments, you will be in good company with other great-looking businesses in your area.

2. Native Advertising

What is native advertising? Think of it as an advertisement that is incognito. That is, while it is an advertisement in the true sense of what that means, to the person looking at and reading it, it may appear as if it's purely meant for informational purposes and not promoting anything.

For instance, if you're a podiatrist, you may want to write a short article on the top 3 feet problems and what helps. At the end of the article, you'd include a brief statement asking something like..." Still need help? Contact our office". There is a topic for every subject, so whether you're a doctor or a beautician, they'll be something you can write about that people will value and that you can advertise.

One example of native advertising is to create an article that appears as if it was published by the website or publication it's in. You will pay the publication for the "ad space" even though the format is that of an article. This will inherently produce trust with the reader since they may not be aware that it's an advertisement. You can also have your articles published on other websites as "sponsored" content. This means that you are paying for your article to be published.

3. Tackle Social Media Advertising

Upon first glance, social media advertising might feel intimidating, but not to worry, there are companies out there that can help you through this. Launching ad campaigns on social media platforms is intrinsic to increasing your followers, generating brand awareness, and acquiring potential new clients. These ads should ultimately direct viewers to a particular landing page on your website. And that landing page should speak directly to the content that was featured in your ad.

It's critical when developing your social media ad campaign that you create a visually appealing ad as well as offer something that your target audience truly desires along with a promotion they can't refuse! Additionally, be sure to utilize all of the campaign's features when developing the ad - which will help target your intended audience - including your target audience's demographics. For instance, if you're an orthodontist, target your ads to mothers and if you're a rheumatologist, target people 55+ years old.

You should also log on to your social media accounts regularly during the day, in case people have questions about things that your ads don't answer.

Ad Pages Solutions offers free social media audits that can improve your online presence. These audits cover everything from content creation to targeting your exact demographic on Social Media.

4. Display Target Advertising

Display ads feature images or videos and are published in designated places within any given website or blog that supports advertisements. Since they're highly visual, they are effective at catching people's eyes. The most common way to develop a display ad campaign is via Google Adwords, which can be very successful if executed correctly.

One important thing to mention here is that there are a lot of technical aspects that you need to understand when creating display ad campaigns and if not done with precision and accuracy, you'll end up wasting your money.

Display advertising is great for local businesses, such as those in the health and beauty segments since these professions easily conjure up visual representations that can be easily illustrated with photos and/or videos. Additionally, these campaigns are very effective when wanting to target people in a specific geographic area, like your town or city.

You can also take advantage of remarketing your display ads. This means that if a person visits your website and then goes to another website afterward that allows advertisements, your display ad will show up. This is why targeted display ads are one of the most powerful ways to reach the exact audience you want to attract.
